Pablo Picasso said The artist is a receptacle for emotions that come from all over the place, from the sky, from the earth, from a scrap of paper, from a passing shape, from a spiders web.This book is a small receptacle of priceless treasures of thought and revelation that is sure to help you identify who you really are as a CREATIVE. Austin s incredible and concise insight reveals the sky, the earth, the scraps of paper, the passing shapes and yes, the spider webs within us all. This is the biggest little book you will ever read. Ray Hughes, Selah Ministries Austin Biel is one of those rare finds, a master musician who is also a gifted communicator, Creative Identity releases insightful keys for discovering a stronger depth of innovative community. The artist will access revelations to expand their creative capacity and productivity. The church leader will find challenging insights that won t read like a protestor shouting outside the gate, Austin writes from the heart of a reformer who loves the church and compassionately points to a more desirable future.Dan McCollam, Director of Sounds of the Nations and author of God Vibrations, A Song for Seven Mountains, and the Worship Writers Guide We are living in an age of connectedness undreamt of by previous generations. The internet and other media are connecting more people, faster and cheaper, than ever before. This ought to bring a wider range of creativity and cultures to bear on each other, and yet among many Christians it seems to have the opposite effect. Why create new stuff when we can rely on a handful of talented sources, with their own YouTube channels, to do...
