Foreign Service employees may develop PTSD as a reaction to criminal or political or terrorist violence like the East Africa bombings in Nairobi and Daur e Salaam in 1998. Some characteristic symptoms of PTSD that emerge are re-experiencing of the events through dreams or nightmares or flashbacks, irritability or anger, insomnia, an exaggerated startle response, hyper vigilance, and a general numbing of emotional responsiveness. In one person these symptoms may appear immediately after the event but go away fairly quickly but in another person they may emerge as much as 3 to 6 months after the event and become chronic, and there are wide variations between those two examples. Mental health support for employees going to Iraq began in November 2003 with the addition of a mental health training to a pre-Iraq orientation course. When the department opened the Foreign Service health unit in Baghdad in July 2004, we made certain that a psychiatrist was part of the deployment medical team. A clinical counselor familiar with PTSD was later added to the Baghdad health unit staff. These mental health professionals also travel to the provincial reconstruction teams to support our employees there. The department began offering mandatory out briefing sessions to all Iraq returnees in August 2004. These sessions give employees information about PTSD, where to get further help within the departments medical program. For those who require brief counseling, the departments employee consultation service and mental health services can provide confidential help. Those employees with more serious or long-term mental health issues are referred...
