RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 20 pages. Original publisher: Washington, D. C. : National Transportation Safety Board, 2007 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)310096698 Subject: Aircraft accidents -- Hawaii -- Kauai. Excerpt: . . . 15 ANALYSIS Accident Sequence The air tour flight departed LIH, on the southeastern part of the island, and headed west to begin a clockwise tour around the island. Weather forecasts for the afternoon included VFR conditions with the possibility of reduced visibility in thunderstorms and heavy rain. The pilot stated that, while flying the helicopter along the islands northern coastline, he maneuvered the helicopter to avoid traffic, and it entered a storm with heavy rain and reduced visibility. The passengers reported that the helicopter made no evasive maneuvers before entering the adverse weather. The pilot stated that, while in the heavy rain, he descended the helicopter to maintain visual reference to the beach. The pilot then decided to turn back, and, while doing so, the helicopters airspeed went to zero, and the helicopter rapidly descended. The pilot added full power and control inputs, but the helicopter continued to descend, and it crashed into the water several hundred feet off shore. Survivors reported they observed heavy rain, thunder, and lightning while they were in the water. Microburst Phenomena A weather study found that satellite infrared imagery for the location and timeframe of the accident indicated the rapid development of cumulus clouds capable of producing heavy rain showers, and stability and energy indices indicated potentially strong updrafts and downdrafts. The heavy rain showers and building thunderstorm activity reported by witnesses and the sounding profile supported the presence of embedded wet-type microburst activity. Statements from the pilot and passengers regarding the helicopters rapid descent in torrential rain are consistent with an encounter with a...
