A TREATISE OF NATURE THE SELF: SURRENDER, SOLITUDE SYNERGY

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 120 pages. Dimensions: 10.0in. x 7.0in. x 0.3in. Encapsulated in a mere twenty-four hours, there are moments when time seems to stop; at least slowing down to the point, each passing minute seems like hours. There is also another peculiar and coinciding sensation when one senses something unusual occurs: in some inexplicable way that which we watch and experience also watches us! At times, the subtlety of these experience is transformational whose profound effect on our senses denotes where the objective melds with the subjective. Nature, therefore, is personified to the nth degree and countless levels and layers beyond the usual ken of reasoning. In all Her varieties, Nature does indeed serve as a reminder for all of us to stop and pay closer attention to unfolding process and reality. Indeed, in the earthlys plane space-time continuum we are all spectators for as long as our breath lasts. As for the prose and style in this treatise, composing the verses have changed over many years. Thus, the wording and phrasing provided me with new insight each time the treatise was edited. (Indeed, there were numerous modifications since 1968 when this essay first came to me and later became a work of prose.) Eventually, the essay-turned-prose was modified into stanzas, of ten lines, and later fashioned into a seven-line meter where each line averages eleven feet (the cadence of the words). For example, this verse explains the structure and rhythm of all the verses: A solitary hawk flies into the ethereal vault, turning on lithe wings that draw lazy circles. the raptor resembles a silent spirit departing. Then vanishes and reappears, again and again, performing graceful ballet to unheard music. It teases one to peer into that tunneling...
