Good-by, Antoinette! My singing days are over: No more of you I ll sing In silent, tender strains. But songs as sweet, my pet, As asphodel and clover From poets souls will spring To you, while song remains. Good-by, Antoinette! Love made you bend your regal Head, till it touched mine, One golden summer day. Love made you pride forget; And so the lark and eagle To heights in worlds divine Together flew away. Good-by, Antoinette! The knife is falling--falling, On wrinkled neck and fair--On blackened soul and white; While I, on this charette, Can hear you calling--calling, And see your eyes and hair Through France s blackest night Good-by, Antoinette! Good-by, my tender, loyal, Sweet and loving heart--Good-by, my life--my queen! I feel your kisses yet--I see you bend your royal Head--and hot tears start--To wet the guillotine! WHY SHOULD I SORROWING SIT? Why should I sorrowing sit? And why, like lost winds, should I moan? Why should old grizzled Time flit Into the awful unknown, And I down here, weeping, alone? Why should I not race with Time, And be the first in at the goal? Why not the end with this rhyme--And, at the end, your pure soul? Then nothing between us would roll. If you are living, above, With tears in your beautiful eyes, And soul o erflowing with love--Why should my soul not arise--Out--up--through the infinite skies? If you are waiting, I ll...
