The object of the present study is to examine - morphologically and semologically - appellative compound substantives, both of whose members are substantival, occurring in the different periods of the English language. In defining the term compound word two things are needful - in the first place to differentiate them from syntactical word-groups, in the second place to differentiate them from simple words. The latter demarcation is simple enough, theoretically; as to the difficulties attending the carrying out in practice of the principles established, see Chap. i. NOREEN puts it thus (Vart Sprak VII 20): a compound word is such a word as can be broken up into parts, which severally refer to some independent sense-unit existing in the languages. By this definition derivatives as well as obscured com- pounds are excluded. As for distinction from derivatives see Paul, Prinzipien p. 322, Sweet, N. E. Gr. 69, TOBLER, Wortzus. p. I, Brugmann, Grundriss p. 5, and others. The differentiation from syntactical word-groups is more difficult. NOREEN (op. cit. VII 36 foll.) has made a critical examination of older opinions as to the...
