Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2011. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .A collection of stories used by the author over the years in speeches to small and large groups of people. A number of people asked if the stories could be written down, because they wanted to use the stories themselves and couldn't remember them. Most of the stories are based upon the author's real-life professional experiences travelling all over the world as a senior global executive management leadership consultant working with organizations of all sizes. But many of the insights the author experienced in life came from seemingly ordinary people in some very ordinary circumstances, so he has included some of these stories as well. Both humorous and insightful, the stories include some unusual experiences with entrepreneurs (The Statue of Liberty Syndrome, Give Him a Raise), some lessons from consulting engagements with global organizations (You're Trying to Put Your Children Through College; I'm Trying to Feed Them, What Keeps You Up at Night?), and a fascinating account of how the author's wife got her US citizenship (They Were Patient With Their Lives). The stories are all true, and in most instances the real first names of the people involved have been used. After all, if it weren't for these extraordinary people this book would never have been written. This latest edition contains stories not in the original edition.
