Keen Surgical Society of the Jefferson Medical College First comes the title of the paper or case, and I would advise you to take pains to select a good title. Never use such a title as Two Interesting Surgical Cases, or An Unusual Surgical Case, etc. These papers will go in the Index Medicus under precisely the title you give, and the title mentioned gives no clue to the nature of the cases you report. Suppose I am hunting up cases of operation for perforation of the intestine in typhoid fever, how can I know that the papers just named refer to just the class of cases I am seeking for? The fact is that such papers are probably never read. State what you are writing about clearly and tersely; if it be a case, give it a good descriptive name; and if there were any unusual complications deserving attention or any novel procedure employed, state it in the title. When you want to write your paper and have your title and material, I would suggest that you first take the etiology; next the pathology (often these two are comparatively intertwined); third, the symptoms of the case fourth, the physical signs fifth, the diagnosis Sixth, the differential diagnosis; seventh, the prognosis; and, eighth, the treatment. This plan gives a logical method to your paper. It is often well, also, at the end of a paper to make a summary of your conclusions, so that there may be crystallized out of your paper the principal conclusions that you have been led to. Always try to express yourself clearly....
