Excerpt from Mary Baldwin News Letter, Vol. 1: April, 1930 Institutions of learning differ not so essentially in their buildings or endowments, in their physical equipment or courses of study, as in the men and women who have shaped their character and determined their spirit, who have moulded their inner life. They are rich and great only. As great personalities have lived within their walls and have influenced and guided the young lives that have touched their own. In the historic little city of Staunton, guarded by the noble mountains that flank the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, stands Mary Baldwin College, an institution around which for well-nigh a century have gathered some of the richest social and cultural traditions of Virginia and the old South, and whose history from its foundation has been linked with the high intellectual and spiritual ideals of the Southern Presbyterian Church. As Augusta Female Seminary it was established in 1842 by a consecrated Presbyterian minister, Rev. Rufus Bailey, who to quote the tribute of a biographer, was a man of superior ability, who could not have resided anywhere without being felt as a power in the community. Supported by a group of Presbyterian ministers and laymen, he opened the Seminary with the avowed purpose to afford the means of a thorough literary and religious education to the female youth of this part of the country. In 1843 the first permanent building was erected on a lot belonging to the Presbyterian church, with a guarantee from the church trustees that the seminary should have possession in perpetuity of the said building, provided always that the institution be directed by a board of which three-fourths should...
