iUniverse, United States, 2006. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Despite remarkable scientific and technological advancements [over the past three centuries], a key assumption in science is materialistic-reductionism , e.g., the notion that every phenomenon or entity [x] may be explained from within its direct interaction with another material element or system [y]. However, based on a novel computational Duality Principle [Bentwich, 2006] the author proves that such self-referential computational ontological system [SROCS] inevitably leads to both logical inconsistency and computational indeterminacy. Dr. Bentwich therefore challenges the computational validity of a series of key scientific conundrums which all share this SROCS structure, including: the quantum uncertainty principle and particle-wave duality, Relativity s constancy of the speed of light, Darwin s natural selection principle and genetic encoding hypothesis, and neuroscience s materialistic-reductionistic working hypothesis. Hence, based on the Duality Principle assertion regarding the conceptual inability to determine the existence [or non-existence] of any material x entity from within its direct interaction with another y element-Dr. Bentwich is able to offer potential resolution for these scientific conundrums. Further theoretical development of the Duality Principle ultimately leads to a hypothetical Mental Projection Unified Theory that has the potential of unifying quantum mechanics with Relativity based on theoretical knowledge in the field of cognitive neuroscience.
