Sarabande Books, Canada, 2007. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Different poets possess different powers. So Lippman has eros and humor; somehow, also, he has a great, unfalsifiable affection for human nature. But his work is also empowered by verbal gusto, a faith in the joy of saying. . . . Full of exuberance and invention, flush with the stuff of struggle in the world, bright colored with mood, The New Year of Yellow is a defense of human nature. I believe in its animal instinct, its god-sanctioned, oxygen-breathing, self-evident inalienable right to pronounce. --From the Foreward by Tony Hoagland In The New Year of Yellow, Matthew Lippman gives voice to a bummed-out, pissed-off tender heart--a hopeless, cranky romantic I with love handles, a joint, and a penchant for blondes. Meet beloved Harvey Pekar crossed with the soul of Frank O Hara, the great suburban middle-wage guy who, when no one is looking, abandons his anger and disappointment just long enough to reveal what s really underneath--an irreverent affection for life. Winner of the 2005 Kathryn A. Morton Prize in Poetry, selected by Tony Hoagland, this debut writer has an adorable, old soul. With poems like Everyone Wants a Monkey, It Is Time for Me to Start Making Love to Joni Mitchell, and Surf Buddha, it s not easy to know what to expect of Lippman, but one thing is for sure--you re going to laugh. Out loud. Matthew Lippman is a writer and a teacher. Currently he teaches English Literature and Creative Writing at Chatham High School in upstate New York, and has been a member of the faculty, Writing Division, in Columbia University s Summer Program for High School Students, as well as an instructor at The Gotham Writers Workshop. In 1990 he received...
