Excerpt from Abstract of the History of Lexington, Mass Lexington is a post town in the County of Middlesex, State of Massachusetts, situated in latitude 42 26 50 North, and longitude; o 13 55 West. It is about eleven miles West-northwest from boston, and about fifteen miles Southeast-by-south from Lowell. It has Winchester. Woburn, and Burlington, on the Northeast; Burlington and Bedford, on the North; Lincoln, on the West; Waltham on the Southwest, and Belmont and Arlington on the Southeast. The township, like most of those in the neighborhood, is somewhat irregular in shape, and contains about twenty square miles, or about 13.000 acres. It is generally more elevated than any of the adjoining towns, unless it be Lincoln; and hence the water from Lexington runs in every direction, and finds its way to the ocean through the Shawshine, Mystic, and Charles rivers. The hills in some parts of the town rise to a considerable height. These afford a delightful prospect, both near and remote. The soil is generally productive, and the rich peat meadows which are found in most parts of the town, add materially to the value of many farms. Lexington has been somewhat celebrated for its hay and fruit crops; but at present more particularly for its milk dairies. Some of our farmers keep from twenty to fifty, and some as high as sixty or seventy cows, making an aggregate of from 350,000 to 400,000 gallons oi milk sent annually to market. Lexington has always been distinguished as a healthy town, and many invalids, on the advice of their physicians, resort to the place. It has a railroad passing directly through the centre of the town, furnishing frequent...
