Excerpt from The Canadian Nurse and Hospital Review, Vol. 16: February, 1920 Many have definitely proved that ies fed on tuberculous sputum are contaminated with tubercle bacilli and deposit specks that contain tubercle bacilli. To verify this, we placed three ies in a large sterile baker and fed them on sputum containing many tubercle bacilli. The ies apparently developed diarrhoea and deposited soft white specks. Forming large circles, which contained, on examination, tubercle bacilli. A study of the bodies and wings of the ies by inoculation into guinea pigs showed that they were generally contaminated with tubercle bacilli, for all the guinea-pigs developed generalized tuberculosis. By other experiments they showed that guinea - pigs fed on food which had been contaminated by these ies did not develop tuberculosis. This seems to show that, while ies may not be a serious menace through contaminating food, they would be a serious source of danger to infants if allowed to contaminate them directly. These writers do not claim that these few experiments Should be looked on as proof positive in a matter so important. They belittle the danger of the dust of rooms in a health resort, from telephone receivers, the danger from properly cleansed eating uten sils, the danger from infected hands through handshaking or from knobs of doors, the danger of transmission by infected ies (at least in guinea pigs).
