Trafford Publishing. Paperback. Condition: New. 324 pages. Dimensions: 7.9in. x 5.0in. x 0.9in. Prologue The heavens erupted with thunder that growled, lightning that burned, and boiling clouds that were black with anger. The fates were mad. More than mad. They were furious. They hissed their rage and stirred chaos, as they let their anger be known to the guardians that lived amongst the stars. One of the guardians had changed the course of destiny that had been written for a mortal on earth. A destiny that the fates had written themselves, when the human had been born. Guardians were not allowed to interfere with a human's destiny, only charged with giving guidance, bringing the mortal back to the path it was to follow if it strayed. To change the course of a destiny could cause a ripple effect that had the power to change other lives, other destinies, and unleash chaos on the earth. As the fates twisted in anger, their voices joined as one to summon a powerful guardian to do their bidding. Saul, they shrieked into the wind, Appear before us! In the blink of an eye, the mighty guardian stood where the dark clouds had just been. They parted for the immortal, but did not disperse, their wind lifting his dark hair, making it dance around his handsome head. The lightning that still forked did not touch him, and the might of the thunder did not frighten him. He was more than all of it put together, he was immortal, powerful and impressive to behold. His dark eyes scanned the expanse, until he found the fates assembled before him. In a deep voice that was meant to soothe and settle, Saul addressed the beings before him. Why have you summoned me he asked. He did not demand but...
