Excerpt from Some of the International Aspects of the Cuban Question: Annual Address, Before the Pennsylvania State Bar Association, at Delaware Water Gap, Friday, July 8, 1898 A man may feel that a war is foolish, he may at heart be opposed to all wars as unphilosophical and unchristian, he may even cherish the notion that war is but systematic homicide and trespass combined and conducted on a gigantic scale under the sanction of law, but with no binding force upon his individual conscience, as the higher law which he at his peril, between his Maker and himself, is bound to obey; but, when the war is actually on, he becomes a party to it whether he wills it or not, and when his fellow men, as his representatives, engaged in the discharge of a duty common alike to him and them, are risking their lives on the land and sea, for his protection, he has no right, measured not by the highest, but by the lowest standard of duty, except to submit to the inevitable. If he can render no other service to the government, he can at least hold his tongue and suffer the stings of conscience in silence. It may be well for such a person indeed to challenge his conscience and probe his consciousness to the bottom lest there be lurking in some hidden corner of his nature some other motive so secreted or so slyly and unconsciously working that what is mistaken for a deliberate judgment on the obligations of duty may be, after all, some selfish interest or the importunate prompting of the instinct of self-preservation. It would be, therefore, not only idle at this...
