Excerpt from The Student's Text Book on Character Reading: Especially Adapted for Use in School, and for the Student Who Would Become a Practical Delineator of Character One hundred years ago, scientific accurate character reading and the ability to determine mental manifestations by physical developments of the brain, by facial expression and development and by physiognomical conditions was a thing unknown and undreamed of. By a mere accident, Dr. Franz Joseph Gall, discovered that the brain is an aggregate of many parts or organs, each manifesting a particular mental faculty. Following up this fact he was enabled, by careful observation and experiment, to correctly determine the exact function of almost every mind faculty, by noticing what mental characteristics invariably accompanied certain Cranial developments. This knowledge was later verified by observation of the effect of disease or injury of these parts. These investigations and experiments led to the fact, that the size of each organ, other things being equal, is the measure of the power of that organ.
