Excerpt from Montana Wild Life, Vol. 2: July 1929 Blood smears were also made from all captive grouse, both hand-reared and wild-trapped, healthy and diseased, young and old. Blood counts were likewise made and the various types of corpuscles figured as well as counted in both healthy and diseased birds. The Significance of these studies is not yet well understood owing to the lack of comparable material but they should become increasingly valuable as our studies progress.
