Excerpt from A Study of the Higher Life of Chicago: A Dissertation Submitted to the Faculty of the Graduate School of Arts and Literature in Candidacy for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Department of Sociology) Chicago is young. The history of the city lies within the memory of its Oldest citizens. One of these was born in 1822 and has just been retired from active service on the police force. In his lifetime an Indian village has been transformed into a great metropolis. He was eleven years old when Chicago was organized as a town, and fifteen when the town became an incorporated city. He has seen the City rise new and renewed since the great fire that swept away one - half of its property only three decades ago. He has seen Chicago s population grow from two white families to two million souls; its area, from a fort and two houses to two hundred square miles; its thoroughfares, from a footpath to miles of streets; its drain age, from a gutter to fifteen hundred miles of sewers; its transportation, from...
