Of a dream, it is asked, who can loose this knot Of any mysteries, or of deep plans, it is asked, Ah! who can untie these knots How difficult that passage was, but he soon unravelled the knot. 27. -- Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting. This striking form of speech is much used in the East at this day. Thus, should two men be disputing respecting the moral character of a third person, one will say, I know the fellow well, I have weighed him, and he is found wanting. He found wanting! you are much lighter than he. What! miscreant, do you wish to weigh against me Thou art but as one part in a thousand. Begone! fellow, or I will soon weigh thee. Yes, yes, there is no doubt about it: you have weighed me; I am much lighter than you. What kind of times are these the slaves are weighing their masters. Yes, the low castes have become very clever, they are weighing their superiors. What! woman, do you call in question the authority of your husband: are You qualified to weigh him The judge has been weighing the prisoners, and they are all wanting. VI. 23. -- No manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God. The Orientals have an...
