The Sac and Fox nation in 1797 were the masters of the Mississippi from the mouth of the Des Moines River to the mouth of the Wisconsin, and in connection with their control of the great Father of Waters they asserted and defended their title to all the lands and streams adjacent and tributary thereto. Their choicest hunting grounds were near the head waters of the Cedar, the Des Moines, the Iowa and the Wapsipinicon. A little beyond those distant localities marked the beginning of the lands of their most dreaded enemy, the Sioux.
