Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from An Address to the People and Congress of the United States These events gave rise to the most pleasing anticipations, which were strengthened by the first acts of the new regime. Early in September the State was invaded by Confederate troops, who held possession for six weeks of the greater portion of its territory. The people, content with, and hopeful of the new order of things, gave them little encouragement and but few recruits, so that by the first of November they were driven from our borders But contrary to all our hopes, winter brought with it a renewal of military government; orders issuing from military officers of every grade imposed daily more stringent regulations upon our commerce with other loyal States; wider signification was given to the term disloyal, by which the victims were marked out for oppression; arrests without warrant and imprisonment without trial became once more the established system of justice; the property of suspected persons was again seized and appropriated to the use of the army without compensation; the civil power was of course to be not more effective in the hands of Mr. Robinson than in those of his predecessor, and spring found the rights of person and property even more insecure than in the darkest hours of the previous year. The Legislature, composed mainly of the personal and political friends of Governor Robinson, during their session in the winter, had passed resolutions of a strongly conservative character, in which they declared, among other things: 1st. That our institutions are assailed by an armed rebellion on one side, which can only be met by the sword, and on the other...
