Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Margaret a Story of Life in a Prairie Home She hath no scorn of common things; And, though she seem of other birth, Round us her heart entwines and clings, And patiently she folds her wings, To tread the humbler paths of earth. Lowell. I Say, Aunt Margaret, why don t you tell us the story you promised to, about that lamp that did such queer things? If your aunt ever gets through gazing out of the window, I should be glad to hear the paper read. Oh, dear, that s always the way; Jack and I never want to hear a story, but what somebody wants something. Its meaner than any thing - and George kicked his heels harder than ever against the wall, as he lay on the floor with his legs at right angles with his body. There was little in the scene upon which Margaret Crosby had been looking out for the last half hour, with her elbow on the window-sill, and her chin in her hand, to at tract and interest one. Even when brightened by sunshine and green trees, and grass and waving grain, it was monotonous; but now, in the deepening twilight of a dull clay, late in October, when fields, woods, and sky all wore a cold, gray hue, it was fairly desolate; and Margaret s face had a dreary look. It was evident that the scene was in keeping with her mood. But the gloom was banished when she heard her father s voice; and she rose quickly from the window.
