Excerpt: . . . a thief gets no title, no matter how innocent he may be of all knowledge of the theft. Now, let us imagine a state wherein this rule of law has been abrogated by enacting that one who so buys, for a valuable consideration, without notice, shall have a good title, the state undertaking to satisfy our sense of justice by some kind of compensation to the unfortunate owner. If, now, in that state, some thief should sell copies of Mr. Elaines book, stolen from him there, the purchaser would not get a good title to them notwithstanding the state law; and this because, under the act of congress, Mr. Blaine had granted to him by the statute the exclusive right of sale, which right the courts would protect by appropriate remedies. I do not stop to inquire whether he could bring replevin, trover, detinue, or the like, on the theory that the constitution and laws of the United States being paramount, and Blaines right of sale exclusive, the federal law would exclude the thieves power of sale under the state statute, and there would therefore be necessarily a modification or limitation imposed by the federal statute on that of the state; but, surely, he could appeal to the remedies given by this copyright statute itself to protect him in its enjoyment. Again, if ti . . s be a correct view of the nature of this grant of an exclusive right to sell, it does...
