Excerpt: . . . putting a premium on the dishonesty or poverty of the defaulting roads. Such complaint was made in Congress and little opposition was made to a bill reported by the Senate committee on military affairs<sup>31</sup> to authorize the reopening of the settlement made with the Western and Atlantic Kailway of Georgia and to make a settlement on the basis adopted with the Tennessee roads. <sup>32</sup> For several successive sessions thereafter bills were introduced, the gist of which was to apply this act to all the indebted southern roads which had made payment before the act of 1871. No such bill was passed, however, and it would seem just to regard the compromise acts of 71 and 75 as necessary adjustments of bad debts rather than favors granted to a few roads, though the House committee on judiciary in a report made in 1878 takes the opposite...
