Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints Millennial Star, Vol. 73: January 12, 1911 We are too apt at placing a commercial value on time. It has a commercial value from the fact that the hope of reward serves as an incentive to labor, and labor develops the character. Time that is used in mere money getting for the money alone or for the pleasures which money can buy, is wasted time and often it is worse than wasted from the fact that it sometimes hardens the heart of the individual and dries up the finer emotions and robs him of his faith in God. Time is money, is the old adage. Time is character, would be a better one, and more nearly correct. Wasted time is not money but it is character - bad character. Character is continually growing; it is not made. If the thoughts of the individual are clean and pure; if his time is spent in well-doing; if faith in God and in His grand designs is springing up in his soul - a well of living water - his character will...
