FAMILY ECONOMICS REVIEW: JUNE, 1971 (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

FBC LTD, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Family Economics Review: June, 1971 During this century home food preservation in this country has fallen off for a number of reasons. Of primary importance has been the movement of population into urban centers. In cities people have little opportunity to produce food to preserve. Storage facilities are likely to be inadequate for more than current supplies while food stores are readily accessible and well stocked. The circumstances that encouraged rural households to preserve food have also changed. Good rural roads have made food stores more accessible. The modern marketing system has made fresh produce available over a greater proportion of the year to both urban and rural households. As both urban and rural women have taken jobs outside the home, they have had less time for putting up food. At the same time the rise in real income levels has released many families from the need to stretch their incomes by growing and preserving food. Also, the introduction of freezing as a means of food preservation has changed the practices of many households that continue to preserve some part of their food supplies.
