Excerpt from The New Monthly Magazine, 1866, Vol. 138 Sabin and Sofala, has been ever since Europeans appeared on that coast, and is now, called Sabia; which all persons versed in Arabian history are aware, is synonymous with Saba, Sheba, or Yemen - names alike applied to the south part of Arabia, from which the Arabs would naturally start for Africa. The Manica old mines here alluded to are further described as being situated in a valley, enclosed in an amphitheatre of hills, having a circuit of about a hundred miles. The spots containing gold are said to be known by the barren and naked aspect of the surface soil. The district is now called Matuka, and the natives who obtain the gold are Boton They dig in any small crevice made by the rains of the preceding winter, and there find the gold in dust. They seldom go deeper than one or two feet at the most from the surface, and, on digging five or six feet deep, they reach the rock. There are other mines still farther from Sofala, being about four or five hundred miles distant, where the gold is found in solid lumps, or as veins in the rocks and stones. In the still portions of the rivers, when they are low, the natives frequently dive to obtain the lumps of gold which have been washed down into these holes and gullies in the beds of the rivers. They will sometimes join together in hundreds, and divert a stream temporarily from its course, to drain these holes, and obtain the rich deposits which they contain. With such natives what could the Portuguese not do if they would only exert...
