Nancy laughed, a laugh of pure happiness. I like to be wanted, she said slipping from her chair to go over and kiss each of the sisters in turn. They were surprised, not being used to childish caresses, but they liked it amazingly, and the warmth of Nancys lips seemed to reach to their frozen hearts. Should you like to see this old house, little Nancy asked Miss Belinda rising. Very much, thank you, said Nancy, and the Misses Allaire arose to conduct her through their home, which was a noble specimen of the New England colonial homestead. Room after room they traversed, each furnished in faded tints and dignified old furniture. They all look as though they had a story in them! cried Nancy, pausing in a great bedroom, rather overawed by the massive bed and bureau. What makes the bedstead like that, Miss Allaire Why does it have a top to it, all lined with puckered up silk, like the front of an upright piano Did they have those beds in the old times, before they knew how to build good roofs, for fear theyd leak Mercy, no, Nancy! The roofs that sheltered tester beds were far away from being leaky ones, child! That is a tester bed, an old four poster, and testers were the pride of the proudest colonists, said Miss Dorinda. It is very royal looking; Ive seen pictures of thrones that...
