Prior to birth the fetus is living on a rich food-supply which is brought by the maternal blood. Immediately after birth this supply is cut off and no food is thus derived from the mother. The infant then begins to starve, that is, to draw upon its reserve body-material until the mother's breasts secrete enough food to supply its demands. We may properly ask, what is this reserve and how does it influence the character as well as the totality of the katabolism? The amount of the material burned we know is determined in large part by the muscular activity of the infant, but since now the infant must live (for the first hours, at least) solely upon its own body-reserve, the character of the material available for combustion and the character of the material actually burned present a new interest.
